Ben Shapiro is a white supremacist who has regularly spewed anti-Muslim hate and he and Candace Owens and a few others may be ones to watch content for over the next few days. I reported all the top instances of his “Myth of the tiny radical Muslim” video from YouTube that a number of journalists have been calling out. There will no doubt be people searching for his content across platforms. I’ll start putting together a list of things like this video of his that may be worth creating an advisory for (though not blocking results).

If this is actually his account, we should consider removing it. Stefan Molyneux is an anti-Muslim/white supremacist. I can’t tell whether it’s his but it leads to a site that looks like his, including terms related to his name in the list I’m generating. Advisory 7: Hate speech: “It's okay to disagree with people here, but Pinterest isn't a place for hate speech. Please make sure you understand our policies when you save Pins.”

Q4: What if someone uses “gay” or “retarded” as an insult?

Answer: Hide this content as (in)sensitive.

Q5: How do we treat offensive appropriation of #blacklivesmatter?

Remove as hate speech: Mocking #blacklivesmatter or POC outright (e.g. #blacklivesplatter, #blackliesmatter)

Hide as divisive:
- Scenario 1: Casting people and functions that were part of systemic bias and violence as victims (e.g. #bluelivesmatter, #confederatelivesmatter, and sometimes #whitelivesmatter)
- Scenario 2: Minimizing civil rights struggle by appropriating slogan for other struggles (e.g. #whitelivesmatter in the context of the opioid crisis)
- Scenario 3: Appropriating slogan in related discussions in a way that’s insensitive or misinformed (e.g. #alllivesmatter)

Ignore as unrelated to hate speech: Slogan used in a context unrelated to vulnerable groups and civil rights issues. Example: Recasting the slogan for humorous effect (#puglivesmatter)
